Summary

The classic baby sword rattle, remixed with printable threads! Great for 2 color versions!

I made this model for a little guy, and as PETG and superglue may have a tendency to separate one day (due to PETGs amazing chemical resistances).

Printed in PETG, and superglued together, these threads will be extremely hard to seperate once cured.

All areas where glue could overflow are hidden inside the handle, ensuring a safe and fun time for any little one that wants to bonk bonk bonk the bad guys without fear of separation.

As per the original model, you will want to print two sets of peas and then drop them into the blade when its done about 65% to 75% of the model. The wide blade does allow it to be done one by one without pausing.

Great for two color prints!
